

Measurements of an industry standard reference antenna have been performed at The Ohio State University ElectroScience Laboratory and at a new test range at the AGC Research Center. The data have now been processed by AGC personnel, in consultation with OSU personnel. This report briefly summarizes the techniques involved in both measurements, and then discusses the comparison of the results as supplied by AGC.